

Hannam Mausoleum

A low bunker-like mausoleum built in brown brick and flint with a barrel-shaped roof. The inscriptions are written on Portland stone slabs set to either side of the entrance. It was originally set in a railed enclosure of which only the plinth survives.

Churchyard of St Augustine
The Street
Northbourne
Kent
CT14 0LG
England

Scan for Google Maps Link

Architects

Not known

Year Built

1834

Style

--

Listing

Grade II (England and Wales)

Condition

Fairly good, though there were weeds growing in the crevices of the stonework (1998).

History

This mausoleum may have been built by Henry Pett Hannam of Northbourne Court (d.1839) as the earliest burial is that of one of his daughters-in-law, Charlotte (d.1834) the first wife of Henry Tessard Hannam. Three of Henry Pett's sons, Henry Tessard (date of death not known) Edward Pett (d. 1868) and Charles (d.1864) were also buried there. The Hannam family lived in the modest eighteenth century house built on the site of the earlier mansion of the same name. The last known date at which a family member was buried in the mausoleum is 1869. A small plan of the interments dated 1901 (with later alterations) suggests there were twelve burials in all.

Sources

Canterbury Diocesan Record Office, parish records of Northbourne, ref. U3/74/28/4.

Photos

Location

SatNav Co-ordinates: 51.22163488560486, 1.340810327548472